Is this form right for you?

- This form might be right for you if you have asserted a claim against someone by filing a complaint, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third-party claim with the court, and you have now decided you no longer wish to pursue your case, possibly because you've resolved the dispute or any number of other reasons.
- If the party you sued has filed a response to your lawsuit with the court (possibly an answer or reply or a motion for summary judgment), court rules do not allow you to dismiss your case voluntarily. Instead, you must file a motion asking the court for an order dismissing the action.

What you should know before you file: The court will not charge you a filing fee to file this notice.

Filing With the Court: You will file this completed notice with the court, just as you filed your complaint or other case documents.

Serving the Other Side: After you file your notice, you must mail a copy to any other party who has filed something in the case.
